BIOGRAPHICAL INFORMATION

Anne R. Humphreys, MA.
Co-Director and Program Manager
Learning Systems Architecture Lab
Carnegie Mellon University

Anne R. Humphreys is responsible for the programmatic leadership and strategy at the Learning Systems Architecture Lab at Carnegie Mellon University, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where she has been a member of the technical staff since 1996. Ms. Humphreys has held a series of positions with increasing responsibilities for administrative program management in the area of distance and online education prior to becoming the Co-Director of the Learning Systems Architecture Lab in 2000. She is responsible for directing the lab's programs: planning, designing, and communicating overall program goals and progress to internal and external clients; tracking cost and schedules against technical and content quality; managing technical risks through early pilot testing and demonstrations; and assisting in the preparation and presentation of proposals for funding. Anne is an adjunct instructor in the H. John Heinz III School of Public Policy and Management and in the Department of English. Anne is also a founder and editor of Fighting Spirit (http://www.fightingspirit.org/), an online resource for survivors of breast cancer.
